Oireachtas report finds damning evidence of collusion between
 UK security forces and loyalist terrorists in string of atrocities

By Ronald Quinlan
 Political Correspondent

BRITISH security forces were last night accused of widespread collusion with loyalist terrorists in 'acts of international terrorism'.

It was the most categorical indictment to date of the role of undercover British agents on both sides of the border in the 1970s.

In an official report, a joint Oireachtas committee said 'the spectre of collusion' at the height of the Troubles was 'widespread'.

Damningly, they accused British security forces of involvement in 'the butchering of innocent victims'.

The committee said it was 'fully satisfied' that there was collusion in a whole series of loyalist gun and bomb attacks - including several south of the Border.

Among the atrocities identified is one of the most shocking mass murders of that era - the Miami Showband massacre of 1975.

But the committee also found evidence of collusion in a number of attacks in the
